New law streamlines permitting process in Massachusetts

By Greg D. Peterson, Esq.

A new law has streamlined and expedited the permitting process in Massachusetts.

The law was signed by Governor Romney on August 2, and takes effect immediately. Here's a summary the changes:

- The Land Court has expanded jurisdiction over a wide range of permitting cases through a separate session called the Permit Session. Aggressive case management will be required. And the Land Court will get an additional judge.

- Special permits under M.G.L. c. 40A will now take effect on issuance, regardless of whether they are appealed. This brings the rule for these permits into line with the long-established rule in Boston zoning and for state environmental permits. This may result in a reduction in special permit appeals, especially those focused purely on delay.
- The Division of Administrative Law Appeals will get over $1.35 million in additional funding, of which $250,000 is

Division of Banks cracks down on improper mortgage lending

By Michael T.
Caljouw, Esq.

The Massachusetts Division of Banks, the state watchdog for the more than 3,000 mortgage lenders and brokers in Massachusetts, took aggressive action on September 8 to address growing problems in the Massachusetts mortgage market.

A special review over the summer by examiners across the state produced troubling evidence that some mortgage lenders and brokers were intentionally steering prospective consumers into loan products by using misleading tactics and, in some cases, committing fraud. The Division was particularly concerned since these bad actors were targeting Massachusetts residents who often were of low or moderate income or limited English speaking and writing ability.

The banking examiners have focused to date on stated income loans, and they have found ample evidence that borrowers' incomes were inflated and borrowers were intentionally placed into loans they could not afford. The Division specifically found: "Over the last few years, with the continued development of the subprime market, reduced documentation mortgage loans are being more frequently marketed to individuals that marginally qualify for mort-

On September 13, REBA hosted a reception for all former presidents of the Association and a dedication of the new Presidents Conference Room at REBA's 50 Congress Street headquarters in Boston. Among the guests were Herbert W. "Wiley" Vaughan, who was president of the Massachusetts Conveyancers Association, REBA's predecessor, in 1963 and 1964. Nearly 20 former Association presidents attended. Pictured (from left to right): former REBA President Daniel J. Ossoff, current president Robert J. Moriarty, Jr., former president Kathleen M. Limited review of arbitration awards now available

By the Hon. Peter W. Kilburn (ret.)

There is a tension between two goals in arbitration: One goal is to have finality, to have arbitration serve as a final answer, not just a first stage in a lengthened litigation. The second goal is to come up with the correct resolution of the dispute. The first goal is served by greatly restricting the grounds for upsetting an arbitration award. They are found in sections 12 and 13 of Chapter 251 and they are cold comfort to a losing party – essentially fraud or partiality on the part of a neutral. If the arbitrator made a mistake of law or fact, that's too bad. So you end up with less of a right of appeal than you would have of an errant trial court judgment.

REBA has an experienced panel of neutrals. None of them is crazy. But how can you assure a client that one of them won't produce a crazy award in an arbitration? There are a couple of possible answers. One is to have recourse to the courts in a proceeding which the parties have agreed in advance will be restricted in scope. The problem, as Judge Kass has pointed out elsewhere, is that it is by no means clear that a court will go along with having its jurisdiction tailored by the parties.

But there is a second avenue of relief. That is to have the parties agree in advance that an award may be reviewed by another arbitrator or arbitrators. REBA now provides for that. Here is how it works: When the parties agree to a REBA one-arbitrator arbitration, they can agree that the award may be reviewed at the election of either party. The party seeking a review can decide, after the award, to have the review by one reviewer, chosen by REBA from its panel. Or he/she can elect review by three reviewers, in which event each party names a reviewer from REBA's panel and the two choose the third, also from the panel. All this is set up so as to be done within 60 days of the date of the award.

The review is limited to the record generated by the arbitrator, including any exhibits. The award is confirmed unless the reviewer(s) conclude there wasn't substantial evidence to support the findings of fact or that there was an outcome-determinative error of law. If the reviewer(s) do not confirm, they can vacate, reverse or revise the award. Their action becomes the award for purposes of Chapter 251.

This approach is meant as a safety valve. There is an incentive not to choose review: If you are the losing party in the award and you choose to have a review, you pay for the review if the award is confirmed.

REBA hopes this approach will comfort counsel whose inclination to reap arbitration's savings in money and time has been outweighed by worries about an aberrant award.

Mission Statement

To advance the practice of real estate law by creating and sponsoring professional standards, actively participating in the legislative process, creating educational programs and material, and demonstrating and promoting fair dealing and good fellowship among members of the real estate bar.

Mentoring Statement

To promote the improvement of the practice of real estate law, the mentoring of fellow practitioners is the continuing professional responsibility of all REBA members. The officers, directors and committee members are available to respond to membership inquiries relative to the Association's Title Standards, Practice Standards, Ethical Standards and Forms with the understanding that advice to Association members is not, of course, a legal opinion.

Endorsement Statement

While the Real Estate Bar Association for Massachusetts, Inc. accepts advertising in its publications and educational offerings, it endorses no products or services.

From the President's desk

By Robert J. Moriarty Jr., Esq.

As I sit down to write this article for the fall edition of REBA News, I realize that I have already reached the final column that I will write as President. Because of the publication dates, this column comes a little earlier than the actual end of my presidency. It seems as if I have just begun, and now I am preparing to leave the office.

Fall is a time of transition; summer ends and it begins to become cool again as the days grow shorter, the kids go back to school, the leaves begin to turn colors, and we at REBA begin the transition to new leadership. Transition times are times to look back and take account of what we have done, and more importantly, what still needs to be done. Much has been accomplished in the past year. The Mortgage Discharge Bill was passed, HB 904 was defeated for this legislative session, REBA started a new ad hoc committee to work with paralegals and title examiners – much of this the fruit of the labor of those who have served before me. Some of the initiatives that I have begun will flower next year or the year after, through the efforts of those who will succeed me.

One of the goals that has been advanced

A founding partner of Marsh, Moriarty, Ontell & Golder, P.C., Bob was a member of the Association's Title Standards Committee from 1984 through 2003. He concentrates in commercial and residential title matters including the review of title abstracts, title reports, title insurance commitments, title certifications and the resolution of title issues on behalf of title insurance underwriters, law firm clients, developer clients and institutional lenders. He is a graduate of Boston College and the University of Connecticut School of Law. He can be reached at rmoriarty@mmoglaw.com.

this year, and hopefully will bear fruit in the coming years, is to further the work of those who came before me to fight against the unauthorized practice of law, particularly in the area of unregulated "witness closings." We have opened up dialogue with the Massachusetts Bar Association to encourage the MBA to again consider the adoption of a definition of the practice of law. We have presented our concerns with respect to harm to consumers being caused by out-of-state lenders violating the Good Funds Statute and through witness closings to Commissioner of Banks Steven Antonakes. We continue to gather evidence of that harm and will shortly make a presentation of this evidence to the Commissioner. The Commissioner's office recently announced a series of closures of improperly operating mortgage companies. REBA expects to participate in educational outreach programs concerning mortgage origination with the Commissioner's office this fall.

In addition to our lobbying activities against HB 904, a select committee comprised of our UPL Committee, the Executive Committee and our legislative and litigation consultants has been meeting this summer and fall to formulate a program to address the concerns of our members concerning unauthorized practice and witness closings. We are reviewing proposed legislation for which we can lobby, instead of waiting for our opponents to make the first move. We are also reviewing litigation options against offenders to establish the legitimacy of our position in a court of law. We will continue to be a presence at the State House and in every available forum to make known our position that the closing of a consumer loan is the practice of law, and only licensed, trained professionals may practice law.

On a lighter note, this past week REBA held an open house to celebrate the opening of our expanded conference space at 50 Congress Street in Boston and to dedicate the Presidents Conference Room. I hope that you have an opportunity to take advantage of our newly expanded space – for a mediation with REBA DR, to attend one of the many committee meetings that are held there, or if you need a conference room while in tow. During the dedication I had the opportunity to greet and recognize nearly 20 former presidents of the association who were in attendance, dating back as far as Herbert "Wiley" Vaughn who was president in 1963-1964. All my predecessors are remarkable persons who were, and are, leaders of the conveyancing bar. It was a humbling experience to realize that I have also been privileged to serve this association, following in the tradition of these great leaders. It was striking for me to realize how involved many of the former presidents remain and how fortunate we are to have their experience and knowledge on our side.

As I leave office I am comforted by the knowledge that the Nominating Committee led by Dan Ossoff has assembled a slate of officers and directors who will continue the tradition of leadership at REBA. Sami Baghdady will soon become President. Tom Bussone and Paul Alphen are ready to move up to even more prominent leadership roles, and we have a Board of Directors who cannot be surpassed in terms of dedication to the association. REBA has a strong core of dedicated individuals who are ready and able to continue leading our bar association through the challenges and opportunities that will come over the next few years. I hope that I may be able to follow in the tradition of my predecessors and can continue to play even a small role in that leadership.

efits to our independent title examiner and paraprofessional members."

The ad hoc committee will be co-chaired by Jackie Waters Adams, a paralegal, and Colby D. Welch, and independent title examiner. Adams is a real estate paralegal at the Natick law firm of Zaltas, Medoff, Raider & Levoy, LLC. Welch is the owner of Colby D. Welch & Associates, a firm specializing in title examination services statewide, based in Melrose. Welch is one of the original members of MITEA, the Massachusetts Independent Title Examiners Association.

The REBA Board has asked at-large member Karen R. DePalma, a Cape Cod-based real estate lawyer, to serve as a liaison to the new committee. DePalma will work with the two co-chairs in developing an array of new member benefits for paralegals and title examiners including educational programs and seminars, networking opportunities, mentoring, and a job referral service on the REBA website, www.reba.net.

"I'm delighted to be working with this group," DePalma said. "Paralegals and title examiners have long been key members of the Association, and this new committee will allow them to organize and become active within the real estate bar."

New ALTA loan policy should be a hit with lenders

By Edmond R. Browne Jr., Esq.

New basic title insurance forms and endorsements were adopted this summer by the American Land Title Association (ALTA).

This is the first comprehensive revision to the standard policy forms in nearly two decades. By way of background, there are numerous ALTA policies in use today dating back to the 1970 policy. Although most of the older policies have been officially "decertified" by ALTA, some lenders and their counsel prefer the older versions for various reasons. The current standard ALTA policy was last revised in 1992.

The adoption of the new forms is the culmination of a three-year project involving all the major title insurance underwriters who make up the ALTA Forms Committee and its key customer groups, including lenders, real estate lawyers, Fannie Mae and academicians. Modern business practices (including the advent of electronic commerce), the passage of new laws and regulations, and a strong desire to better serve the industry's customers were the main drivers for change.

The primary advantages of the new policy forms are that they are easier to understand and provide new coverages. Although over the past few years ALTA has adopted various forms specifically for residential transactions, the 2006 forms are intended to be used for both commercial and residential real estate transactions.

Since it is not possible in a brief article to provide a comprehensive overview of all of the new policy forms, a few of the most significant changes to the loan policy are highlighted below. Future articles will focus on the owner's policy, revised endorsements, and advising your clients about how to choose the right policy.

Loan policy highlights

Easier to Understand

One of the most significant changes is that the new policy states more clearly what risks are insured, i.e. the Covered Risks. The familiar eight insuring clauses in the 1992 policy have been expanded to 14 and the Exclusions have been reduced. New definitions have been added and many provisions have been rewritten with clarity in mind. One example is the new definition of Insured, which includes a variety of successors and grantees to accommodate common estate planning structures and incorporate various government entities, thus obviating the need for an endorsement to the policy.

Electronic Documents

The policy also makes clear that there is coverage for a variety of potential defects involving the documents and parties to a transaction, including many related to the creation, execution and recording of electronic documents. The new policy insures the validity of electronic documents, signatures and recordings.

Gap Coverage

A new Covered Risk expressly provides coverage for certain losses that occur during the "gap" between the effective date of the policy (typically the closing or funding date) and the recording of the security instrument. However, this gap coverage does not apply to a lien for real estate taxes that becomes due between the policy date and the date of recording.

Expanded Mechanic's Lien Coverage

Another coverage of interest to lenders involves mechanic's liens. The 2006 loan policy makes it clear that it insures the priority of the lien of the mortgage over mechanic's liens for construction advances for work contracted for before the policy date or financed with the proceeds of the loan. The new policy also removes

Condo Prices Continue to Be Higher Than House Prices

The American Dream used to involve a house in the suburbs. Increasingly, it seems to involve a condo downtown. The median price of a condominium topped the median price of a single-family home for the first time last year. And the trend is continuing. This year, the median price of a condo is about $5,000 more than a house.

Why the change? One reason is that condos increasingly tend to be located in expensive downtown areas of major cities. But another reason is that more people want to live in them. Compared with 30 years ago, a much smaller percentage of households have small children, and many people who are pressed for time appreciate not having all the maintenance responsibilities that a house requires.

Condo owners buy a unit in an association, along with a percentage interest in the common areas. The common areas are managed by a trust, with the trustees elected by the unit owners. Owners must pay a monthly or quarterly "condo fee" to the trust, which is used to manage the property and, sometimes, must pay a "special assessment" to cover unusual expenses.

If you're interested in buying a condo, you'll want to ask a lot of questions that wouldn't come up if you were buying a house. Here are just a few:

- How much are the condo fees? Do the trustees expect them to increase?
- Are there any current or pending projects that might require payment of a special assessment?
- Do the trustees perform all the management tasks themselves, or do they hire a management company?
- What major maintenance work is expected over the next few years? Have the trustees set aside a reserve fund that is sufficient to cover the cost?
- What insurance do the trustees have if there is damage to the common areas, or if someone gets injured?
- What are the condo's rules for pets? Parking? Show shoveling? Landscaping? Etc.

We would be happy to help you understand the many legal implications of buying a condominium unit.

Surge Una Nueva Ola de Juicios por Defibriladores

Los defibriladores portátiles (AED) son dispositivos que se utilizan para reanimar a las personas que han sufrido un paro cardíaco. Sin embargo, en los últimos años ha habido un aumento en el número de juicios relacionados con estos dispositivos. Los juicios alegan que los fabricantes de AED no han proporcionado suficiente formación a los usuarios, lo que ha resultado en lesiones o la muerte.

HUD reaches more settlements in East-West Mortgage kickback case

By Joel A. Stein, Esq.

It was previously reported in this publication that 1-800-East-West Mortgage Company reached a settlement agreement with the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and agreed to pay $150,000 to settle charges that it accepted gifts and tickets in return for the referral of mortgage business.

In a news release dated September 6, HUD announced that it has reached a separate agreement for related RESPA violations with a real estate appraisal company in New England and a Worcester-area attorney who is also a director of East-West.

The attorney paid for tickets to a Boston Red Sox game, tickets to a New England Patriots event and upscale restaurant certificates, which HUD found were provided to East-West and its employees to promote a referral of loan closings from East-West to the attorney's firm. The appraisal company was charged with providing restaurant gift certificates in exchange for the referral of appraisal business.

The attorney agreed to pay $15,000 and the appraisal company agreed to pay $4,000. Both parties agreed not to give gifts and things of value to settlement service providers in exchange for business referrals, to comply with RESPA and to cooperate with the agencies' ongoing investigation of other settlement service providers who provided kickbacks to East-West. The settlement agreements can be found on the Internet at <http://www.hud.gov/offices/hsg/sfh/res/peters.pdf> and <http://www.hud.gov/offices/hsg/sfh/res/grasso.pdf>.

Brian Montgomery, HUD's Assistant Secretary, stated, "Regardless of the size of the business, kickbacks and referral fees ultimately hurt the consumer. The law is clear – it is illegal to give or to get anything of value in exchange for the referral of settlement service business. For HUD's part, we will continue to take a hard line against these sorts of artificial influences on the cost of buying or refinancing a home mortgage, whether from those who pay or receive referral fees in violation of RESPA."

Class action in New Hampshire

A class action suit has been filed in the U.S. District Court for the District of New Hampshire, alleging that First American Title Insurance Company charged premiums and amounts exceeding its filed rates for refinance transactions. (Case No. 1:06-cv-286-JD.)

Unlike Massachusetts, New Hampshire provides filed rates. This lawsuit concerns the "re-issue rate," which applies if a borrower refinances within 10 years of the first mortgage. First American's rate filing provides that, "if the prior policy was not a First American policy, you must obtain a copy of the prior policy to qualify for the re-issue rate."

Typically, a closing attorney will send a borrower a form letter prior to closing that enumerates the items necessary to complete the refinance transaction. These letters produced by my office as well as letters I have seen from other law firms will request the borrower to produce a copy of the title insurance policy and inform the borrower that if the title policy is provided, the re-issue rate will be applied.

The attorney who prepared the complaint in the New Hampshire case misconstrues at least two essential facts. First, he claims that First American necessarily must have relied upon the existence of an acceptable prior policy in making its decision to obtain a shortened title examination. A shortened title examination is based simply on the fact that the agent was issuing only a lender's policy, which would result in a claim only if the lender foreclosed on the mortgage. Second, the complaint states, "First American's rate manual requires its own agents to obtain the prior policy and they elected not to do so." However, the rate manual requires the agent to obtain the prior policy to qualify for the re-issue rate.

Despite these issues, the plaintiff bar is becoming increasingly active throughout the country. It is only a matter of time before we see these types of cases in Massachusetts. This is a situation that should be taken into account when determining whether to charge the re-issue rate even if a copy of the prior policy has not been obtained.

Environmental insurance makes it easier to close deals involving brownfields

By Kathleen J. Freeman, Esq.

Environmental insurance is increasingly the key to real estate deals involving "brownfields" – underused industrial or commercial facilities with real or perceived environmental contamination and the associated liability, cleanup costs and stigma.

Recently, insurance underwriters have developed a variety of affordable and flexible products that allow a buyer to transfer many of these risks for a one-time premium. For many of the brownfields transactions I handle, insurance is the glue that holds the deal together.

These products include:

- "Pollution Legal Liability" coverage for unknown pre-existing conditions or conditions that arise during the policy term. This coverage typically includes property damage, cleanup costs, personal injury claims and business interruption.
- "Cleanup Cost Cap" coverage, which protects against cleanup costs that exceed estimates.
- "Secured Creditor" coverage, which protects lenders.

In Massachusetts, state-subsidized insurance is available for certain projects under the Brownfields Redevelopment Access to Capital program. For more information, contact Thomas J. Barry, Senior Vice President, Director of Environmental Programs, Massachusetts Business Development Corp. (781-928-1100 or tbarry@mass-business.com) or www.mass-business.com.

Negotiating the best insurance arrangement is usually a group effort that involves the insured's broker, the insurance company risk analyst/underwriter, and legal counsel and environmental consultants for both the insured and the insurance company.

Finding the right product at the right price typically requires some shopping around. Six carriers write some 90 percent of all environmental policies in the U.S. – AIG, XL, ACE, Chubb, Zurich, and Quanta. In choosing a carrier, besides policy terms and price, be sure to consider its financial strength and rating (AM Best and Standard & Poor's), whether it specializes in environmental products, its flexibility to modify standard policy conditions, its claims payment history, and its longevity in the environmental insurance market.

The application process

For most transactions, insurance companies want to see, at a minimum, a Phase I investigation report. As a result of new EPA rules that take effect November 1, 2006, insurance companies will likely want Phase I reports to satisfy the American Society for Testing and Materials updated Standard E1527-05.

For Cleanup Cost Cap coverage, the insurance company is likely to require some form of remedial plan, such as a Phase IV Remedy Implementation Plan.

Because insurance carriers form opinions about a site's risks early in the process, it is important to view the site from the underwriter's perspective when compiling the reports and data that go into your application. You should ask yourself: What information about the site or deal would the insurance company want to see? What affects premium costs and claims payments? Is this a "hot button" site, such as a gas station, dry cleaner, or photo lab? If so, the insurance company will likely want to see recent soil, groundwater, and air testing results.

The scope of the insured's pre-purchase due diligence plays an important role in making the insurance company

Other states grapple with non-lawyers at real estate closings

By Richard A. Hogan, Esq.

Throughout the nation there has been a great deal of focus on what constitutes the practice of law in the context of a real estate transaction.

A recent report by the ABA's Task Force on the Model Definition of the Practice of Law recommended that each state adopt its own definition of the practice of law, keeping in mind "the basic premise that the practice of law is the application of legal principles and judgment to the circumstances or objectives of another person or entity."

Richard Hogan serves as legislative and regulatory counsel for CATIC, New England's largest bar-related® title insurance underwriter. He advises the company on a wide range of issues relating to corporate, real estate, legislative and regulatory matters. He is also a member of the Legislative Committee and the National Affairs Committee of REBA. Rich can be reached at rhogan@catic-e.com.

Here in Massachusetts, the Suffolk Superior Court stepped into the fray in 2001 in Massachusetts Conveyancers Association et al. v. Colonial Title & Escrow, Inc. et al. The Court held that the conduct of real estate closings by non-attorneys violated the Commonwealth's statutes governing the unauthorized practice of law. The defendant was enjoined from performing certain activities, notably the evaluation of title to real estate; the preparing, drafting and reviewing of legal documents affecting title to real estate or the parties' obligations with respect to that real estate; the explanation at closing of the import of the documents; and the issuance of title insurance. It remains to be seen whether there will be further consideration in the court system of the traditional role of the attorney in real estate closings.

Many other jurisdictions in recent years have addressed the same issue, with varying results. The Rhode Island General Assembly, for example, has considered legislation in the last four legislative sessions that would define the practice of law to include the evaluation of the legal rights and obligations of real estate buyers, sellers, lenders or borrowers in real estate transactions. Each time, CAT-IC sent a representative to the General Assembly to testify in support of the bill. Unfortunately, none of these bills was enacted, and the state's definition of the practice of law, §11-27-2 R.I.G.L., still contains no specific mention of the attorney's role in real estate closings.

The Connecticut Supreme Court has been reluctant to give a precise definition of the practice of law, but has instead depended upon a case-by-case approach when confronted with the issue. The most recent treatment of the issue is Statewide Grievance Committee v. Patton, 239 Conn. 251 (1996), where the Court held that the preparation of legal documents is understood to be the practice of law. The Court enjoined a document preparer from preparing legal documents for its customers.

A June 1999 article in the Vermont Bar Association's Vermont Bar Journal & Law Digest laments the inroads made by non-lawyers into areas traditionally viewed as constituting the practice of law. (Clarke A. Gravel, Esq., "We Are Under Attack!" 25 Vermont Bar Journal & Law Digest at 41.) The author refers to a 1962

Vermont Supreme Court decision, In re Welch, where the Court held that preparation of legal instruments securing legal rights was the practice of law, and that the respondent non-lawyer was engaging in the unauthorized practice of law in preparing deeds, advising parties as to the legal implications of those deeds, and supervising the execution of those deeds. The author notes the general lowering of the barriers to non-lawyer activity, specifically mentioning a recent Washington Supreme Court decision that document preparation does not constitute the practice of law. The author questions whether the Vermont Supreme Court would hold to the Welch reasoning if the Court were to face the issue again today.

Like Connecticut, Maine has no specific definition of the practice of law and relies on a case-by-case assessment of whether a particular activity requires legal knowledge and skills. Nor does New Hampshire have a definition; in fact, a 2002 task force appointed by the New Hampshire legislature to define the practice of law ended up issuing a final report stating that it was "unable to reach a con-

New formatting rules for deeds take effect Jan. 1

First page must have three-inch top margin

By Richard P. Howe Jr.

A handcrafted deed that arrived in the mail from Florida caught my attention yesterday. Among several problems with the document were margins barely one-sixteenth of an inch wide. After grudgingly granting permission to record it, my thoughts turned to document formatting.

The Massachusetts Deed Indexing Standards include a set of Document Formatting Standards. Under these Standards, documents recorded after January 1, 2007 must meet the following requirements:

- Documents must be on white 20-pound paper without watermarks.

Dick Howe is register of deeds in the Middlesex North District Registry in Lowell. He can be reached at richard.howe@sec.state.ma.us.

- All document pages and attachments must be on paper with a minimum size of 8.5 by 11 inches and a maximum size of 8.5 by 14 inches.
- Printing must be on one side of the page only; no double-sided pages will be accepted.
- On the first page of a document, the top margin must be three inches; the side and bottom margins must be one inch. On second and subsequent pages of the same document, all margins must be one inch.
- All documents must have a font size no smaller than 10-point Times New Roman or its equivalent.
- Blanks in an instrument and corrections to an instrument may be made in pen.
- Signatures must be in either black or dark blue ink. Names must be typed, stamped or printed beneath all written signatures.
- All documents must display on the first line of print on the first page a single title identifying the recordable event that the instrument represents.

- Colored markers may not be used to highlight text.

The foundation for these standards is Massachusetts General Laws chapter 36, section 12A, which states: "A register of deeds may refuse to accept an instrument for recording if it cannot be properly duplicated or a proper record cannot be made thereof." Until now, this has been a subjective standard that varies from registry to registry. Because the trend in nationwide registry operations is toward greater standardization, the Massachusetts Registers and Assistant Registers of Deeds Association has sought to specify the minimum standards that will be allowed.

In composing these standards, the Association used as a model a March 2000 White Paper of the Property Records Industry Joint Task Force called "Real Estate Document Formatting." Several other states have enacted similar formatting standards, including Florida, Iowa, New Hampshire, Washington and Wisconsin.

The Massachusetts standards are grounded in the actual needs of the registry to produce legible, reliable and usable copies of all recorded documents. As the printed record book becomes an historic artifact, the quality of the electronic image becomes even more critical. Each of the new standards contributes to this goal.

Three-inch margin controversial

Of all the standards, the most controversial seems to be the requirement of a three-inch top margin. While this may seem excessive, every document that is recorded must have considerable information imprinted on it, such as the date and time of recording, the instrument number, the book and page number, the number of pages in the document and the tax stamp. Few of today's documents leave sufficient space for this information. Consequently, recording information added by the registry either obscures some of the content of the document or is placed so close to the margin that it is

THE CHICAGO TITLE SYMBOL

Our corporate symbol is inspired by that age-old aphorism, "A man's home is his castle." For just as medieval castles survive to this day, the men and women of Chicago Title Insurance Company deliver the kind of protection that ensures our clients' real estate investments will endure for many years to come.

The castle conveys what we stand for: strength. The turret motif of our logo is modeled after the old Chicago Water tower, one of the few edifices to survive the Great Chicago Fire.

But the ring around the castle is of even greater significance – it is emblematic of a moat. As a moat protects a castle's walls, so our title insurance protects our customers' properties. As you know, the deeper and wider the moat, the more it safeguards the castle.

And at Chicago Title Insurance Company, we boast unsurpassed resources as the #1 title insurance company in America, spanning the country with more than 3,700 locations nationwide.

Since 1847, we've been standing behind American property owners, ready to defend them swiftly and firmly, summoning our strength from reservoirs hard won by long, consistent prudence.

Continuous data protection: Improving on tape-based backups

By Chris Baer

Law firms that specialize in real estate transactions have long been aware of the importance of protecting important client correspondence, contracts and agreements. In fact, many of the fireproof file cabinets on the market today were initially created to protect important legal documents.

Technology has brought great efficiencies to bear on the management of this data in an electronic format, yet it also presents new risks to firms as data can now be expunged forever with one accidental mouse click.

All too many firms have realized the hard way that protecting data must go beyond periodic backups if they expect to reliably protect their customers' data (and their firm's uptime) from interrupted access or permanent deletion. It's important to understand that not all data protection strategies meet all needs.

Chris Baer is expert at reducing the cost and complexity of data storage and architecting data protection solutions. He can be reached at chris.baer@broadleaf-services.com.

Let's take a step back and understand why people make "backups." There are three primary business drivers to backing up data:

Data Archival: Archiving data is a cost-effective way to meet regulatory or compliance guidelines, and to bring back information from many years ago that needs to be reviewed or submitted in litigation. Professionally administered tape backups maintained in a fireproof, climate controlled offsite facility make sense for this need.

Disaster Recovery: Planning for disaster recovery calls for a business to assess and plan for how to continue operations in the event of a facility outage, such as fire, flood or theft. Solutions for this need may differ depending on how quickly a firm needs to recover and how much data it can afford to lose – an hour, a day, a week, etc.

Onsite Data Continuity: 99% of data loss occurs in the office when a person or virus overwrites file data or deletes the file or database itself. Since tapes can't help here, creating a strategy that protects your data on an intraday basis, rather than just backing it up, will quickly pay for itself. This is where continuous data protection steps into the picture, to close the gap in protecting your firm.

As data sets continue to grow and demand for immediate availability of data increases, many companies are researching methods to facilitate intraday recovery. The ROI is simple: A single event can cost hours, days or months of trying to reconstruct data. And loss to a business's goodwill and bottom line as a result of data corruption is incalculable.

Let's look at a hypothetical scenario: An attorney, let's call him Paul Hewson, accidentally overwrites the legal document that he has been working on all morning. There have been several crucial changes made in the preceding few hours, and he's due to orchestrate an important real estate closing in 45 minutes. A tape-based backup system is severely inadequate in dealing with this scenario, as this morning's document changes cannot be recovered. (Fact:

60% of recoveries from tape backups fail in small office environments, but that's a story for another column.)

Yet if Hewson had implemented a continuous data protection strategy, which need not be too expensive for a small office, he could have recovered fully in just a few minutes and made it to his closing prepared and ready to go.

Configuring off-site data replication used to require extensive technical expertise and quite a bit of administrative overhead, but there are now options that meet the needs of firms with tight budgets and limited IT resources. Many firms choose to outsource this service as an alternative to spending IT department time on backups.

Not only does a disk-to-disk backup strategy create a more robust environment in which to restore data, it also has the serendipitous benefits of shrinking backup windows and reducing the impact of backups on the network.

Achieving this level of redundancy is not difficult to implement and maintain. It's simply a matter of creating the right solution for the business needs that are specific to the firm.

THE BREAKOUT SESSIONS

Buying and Selling the Subdivision House Under Construction — If You Build It, We Will Close (Or Try To) — Mark B. Johnson; Sarah H. Ricciardelli

Representing Buyers, Sellers and Lenders in new construction can be challenging. This session will address issues that are unique to such transactions, including permitting documents, the use of offer forms, purchase and sale agreements, title issues, financing contingencies, how to handle extras and upgrades, warranties, mechanic liens, delay in closings, incomplete and punch list issues, escrow agreements, lender issues, closing documents and post-closing obligations of the parties.

Housing Court Practice: It's More Than Evictions — Chief Justice Steven D. Pierce; Maureen E. McDonagh; Archer Battista

We are pleased to present a panel led by Housing Court Chief Justice Steven Pierce on Housing Court practice and the breadth of the judicial resource that the Housing Court represents. This session is intended as an orientation for the general real estate practitioner to the jurisdiction, variety of caseload and practice in the housing court, featuring as its centerpiece remarks from the Chief Judge. Experienced practitioners representing landlords and tenants will offer their perspectives and guidance as well. Come learn more about the Housing Court, its jurisdiction, and facets of practice. This session is being led by the newly constituted Housing Court Subcommittee of REBA's Litigation Committee.

Nuts and Bolts: From Title Abstract to Title Commitment to Title Policy and Insured Closing Letters — Amanda Zuretti; Eugene Gurvits

For both the experienced real estate practitioner as well as those new to this area, we have two title experts to provide their invaluable insights into some of the title matters that surface regularly during real estate practice. Attorney Amanda Zuretti will take the mystery out of Insured Closing Letters ("ICL"), also known as Closing Protection Letters ("CPL"), review recent appellate case law on the subject and analyze the scope of title insurers' liability and remedies. Attorney Gene Gurvits will present a refresher course on reviewing title abstracts, evaluating pesky title problems, and drafting title insurance commitments and policies.

Making Development of Affordable Housing Easier: The New Universal Affordable Housing Restriction and the SJC Ruling Limiting Appeals of 40B Permits — Theodore C. Regnante; Phyllis A. Zinicola

Two recent developments will help break down the barriers to developing affordable housing in Massachusetts, potentially easing the state's still-critical shortage of affordable units. First, in a sharp departure from almost twenty years of affordable housing lending practice, MassHousing has obtained Fannie Mae's endorsement of a new form of Affordable Housing Restriction in which affordability restrictions will survive foreclosure. This change gives municipalities the assurance they have sought that units on the Subsidized Housing Inventory will remain there and remain available for use by low- and moderate-income households, even in the event of foreclosure. Second, in Standerwick v. Board of Appeals of Andover, 447 Mass. 20 (June 16, 2006), the SJC dramatically limited the scope of abutters' appeals under Chapter 40B when it held that the preservation of real estate values of property abutting an affordable housing development was clearly not a concern that the 40B regulatory scheme was intended to protect. Our two expert panelists will discuss how these developments will impact the rapidly changing world of affordable housing practice.

New Expedited Permitting Legislation — Chief Justice Karyn Scheier; Greg D. Peterson; Brian Levey; Retired Judge Rudolph Kass; Judge Leon J. Lombardi

The expedited permitting legislation enacted in August, which took effect immediately, has made major changes to procedures available to developers and towns to move projects through permitting and appeals and on to construction. Among the new features, project proponents and towns can mutually elect an expedited permitting process that requires expedited review of appeals. A new Permit Session of the Land Court has been created to hear appeals of major permitting and land use cases. Holders of special permits may commence construction while appeals are pending. Our panel is being led by two of the principal authors of the legislation, Greg Peterson and Brian Levey, who will be explaining highlights of the new legislation. Moderating will be Hon. Rudolph Kass, REBA Dispute Resolution Neutral and retired Massachusetts Appeals Court Judge. Also joining the panel will be Chief Justice Karyn Scheier of the Land Court to provide an orientation to the new Permit Session.

Proposed REBA Office Lease Form — Edward M. Bloom; John T. Ronayne

REBA's Leasing Committee has generated what we expect to become a valued and widely used resource for our members: a form of office lease with fit-up work letter exhibit. This thoughtful form addresses in efficient fashion numerous typical issues faced by the draftsman of a commercial office lease. This form is to be voted on at our luncheon business meeting as a REBA approved form. This session enables members to review the form, its purpose, and what it does (and does not) do, led by two of its principal draftspersons, Leasing Committee Chair Ed Bloom and committee member John Ronayne.

Recent & Pending Legislation: Summary and Highlights — Edward J. Smith; Edward A. Rainen

You won't want to miss this twice yearly update from REBA's long-time Legislative Counsel, Ed Smith, and the co-chair of the Legislation Committee, Ed Rainen, on the recent and pending legislation on the Hill. Ed Smith gives us up-to-date-goings-on up on the Hill affecting REBA members, and Ed Rainen discusses the inner workings of REBA's Legislation committee.

Recent Developments in Massachusetts Case Law — Philip S. Lapatin

Phil Lapatin draws a huge crowd with this session every meeting. Now, you won't have to stay late to hear him. His new timeslot is right before luncheon. His session, Recent Developments in Massachusetts Case Law is a must-hear for any practicing real estate attorney.

Could a disaster wipe out Registry of Deeds records?

By Carrie Rainen

Could a disaster wipe out vital registry of deeds records? With the threat of terrorism, Hurricane Katrina and the recent floods in Taunton, this question is becoming increasingly relevant.

Currently, due to the elimination of county government in most of the Commonwealth, 13 of the 21 registries of deeds are supervised by the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. Most of those registries' indexes and documents are available on the website www.masslandrecords.com.

When a state-run registry receives a document for recording, a digital image is scanned, and the information for the electronic grantor index is entered into the system by registry staff. Those fields create digital records in the registry's on-site system, and simultaneously create a duplicate in the Secretary of the Commonwealth's web server in Boston. Each recording is simultaneously backed up in Boston and in the registry itself. (However, the image of the document is not stored in the Secretary of State's Internet server until the end of the day, when transferring large image files is less likely to slow down the system.)

While this automatic backup sounds like the perfect plan, all of the records are located in eastern Massachusetts. The Suffolk Registry is two blocks away from the Secretary of State's office and the Middlesex South Registry is less than two miles away. What happens if both systems are wiped out?

Considering the almost daily discussions in the media concerning the establishment of an LNG tanker facility on a Boston island, the possibility of conflagration emanating from a disaster at the existing LNG plant on the Mystic River in Everett is hardly far-fetched.

Several registers under state supervision have been under the mistaken impression that a third copy of the document is made electronically and transmitted to a facility in Texas. Originally, when the system was first being tested in the Middlesex North Registry, documents were recorded and simultaneously backed up in the registry and in a Texas facility. However, before the system was introduced to other registries, Secretary of State Galvin requested that the duplicate backup be moved to his facility in Boston.

Kevin Harvey, the Assistant Secretary of State and Director of the Registries of Deeds, is aware of this concern. "As we go further west, we're looking at backup locations...geographically closer to the registries out [west]," he said. He also reports that the Secretary's office is seeking a dual backup system.

In addition, the state has helped the registries under its stewardship to develop satellite locations. Currently, there is a Middlesex South satellite in the Middlesex North Registry, there is a Hampden satellite in Westfield, and soon there will be a Worcester District satellite in the Worcester North Registry. "We have a disaster recovery plan for all registries," said Harvey. "It is always ongoing, improving and changing procedures to keep up with the environment we're working with."

Many have own process

Even under the state-supervised system, many of the state-run registries still maintain their own processes to deal with records backup and disaster planning. For example, Essex South, Middlesex South and North, Worcester District, Suffolk, and Hampden counties all back up digitally and on microfilm. But each of these registries has a different process of backing information up, and each stores its records differently.

The Worcester District Registry stores its digital tapes and microfilm in registry vaults, as well as off-site storage vaults located at Iron Mountain facilities in New York and Northborough, Massachusetts. The Middlesex South Registry has information on DVDs and microfilm, which are also kept with Iron Mountain. The Essex South Registry also stores its microfilm and digital backups with Iron Mountain. The Middlesex North Registry stores its microfilm off-site with a different data storage company located in western

Secretary of State Galvin: Ten years of leadership in land records

By John L. O'Brien, Jr.

Next year will mark the tenth anniversary of the abolition of Franklin and Middlesex Counties, the first of many Massachusetts counties to meet their demise due to fiscal problems. The silver lining in that dark cloud was the transfer of 13 of the state's 21 registries of deeds from county government to state control under the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Over the years, Secretary William F. Galvin has demonstrated a far-reaching vision of how registries of deeds should fit into a larger system of "one-stop shopping" for land-related information. Secretary Galvin has also struck a balance between allowing worthwhile individual registry initiatives to proceed and guiding the 13 state-controlled registries toward standardization and technological advancement.

One of the first challenges in this period was Y2K. Thanks to the intense preparations undertaken as the year 2000 approached, few problems occurred. In retrospect, it is tempting to say that the entire Y2K issue was overblown, but nothing could be further from the truth. Without the intensive remediation efforts that were undertaken, the computer systems at five registries would have crashed on January 1, 2000. These efforts had a dual function: They fixed the Y2K problem and they laid a solid infrastructure for the introduction of new, transformative technologies such as the widespread use of high-speed Internet service and electronic storage of data and images.

The next major effort was replacing obsolete registry computer systems with state-of-the-art hardware and software. The first new system was installed in Middlesex North in June 2002. Since then, new systems have been installed in 12 of the Commonwealth's 21 registries (nine state and three county). One of the most valuable features of the new systems is the Internet component, which allows the citizens of Massachusetts to view newly updated data and images in "real time."

Secretary Galvin made a public policy decision during this period to have the data and images at the state registries freely available on the Internet. This 24/7 access has transformed the use of land records in Massachusetts. It has empowered average home buyers and sellers by making a vast amount of real estate information available to them – instead of just professionals who can afford online access fees.

Of course, online access to land records is only as valuable as the quality and quantity of electronic records available. Through funding provided by Secretary Galvin's office, many of the state's registries have added decades' worth of land records to their electronic holdings. This transition of records from paper to electronic images is ongoing, with more images being added to registry websites every day.

However, this work is still not complete. The age of electronic recording – where the customer records an electronic image of a document from a remote location without ever setting foot in the registry – is now upon us. This process will bring a radical alteration of hundreds of years of real estate practice. Secretary Galvin has directed a pilot program for electronic recording at the Middlesex North Registry that will establish statewide procedures for this new remote recording system. Thanks to Secretary Galvin's leadership, this change promises to greatly benefit this vital part of our state's economy.

Could a disaster wipe out Registry of Deeds records?

Massachusetts. In the Hampden Registry, all land records and plans from 1636 to date are backed up on microfilm, which is stored off-site at the Western New England Archives in Enfield, Connecticut. All current recording activity is put onto optical platters, which are transported to the archives when full.

Massachusetts registries of deeds are becoming more aware of just how fragile their records are. The ultimate goal is a unified statewide method of protecting these valuable records, but much still remains to be done.

John O'Brien has served as Register of the Essex South District Registry of Deeds for nearly 30 years. A long-time resident of Lynn, he is a former president of the Massachusetts Registry of Deeds Association.

Environmental insurance makes it easier to close brownfields deals comfortable underwriting the risks. To this end, the application package should include, at a minimum:

- The size of site or deal, and whether it is a portfolio or a single property.
- The prior site use, the future site use, and surrounding uses.
- The contamination type.
- The contamination location. Is it on-site only? Is migration likely?
- The stage of remediation and redevelopment. Is there a Response Action Outcome Statement or Remedy Operation Status Opinion in place?
- The expected remedial costs and volatility.
- Will remediation take place after transfer of title?
- The level of regulatory agency involvement, including documents such as covenants not to sue; no-further-action letters; or positive audit findings.
- The regulatory climate regarding this type of property, including any changes in regulations or heightened enforcement.
- Any contractual arrangements that manage, shift, or allocate risk, such as indemnities, assumption of risk, liability caps, or carve-outs.
- Any statutory exemptions or defenses to liability.
- An executive summary by the insured's environmental consultant highlighting the bottom-line results from the due diligence.

Evaluating the proposal

After the insurance company issues its proposed coverage, carefully review it for accuracy and completeness. Important items include:

- The scope of coverage, including cleanup, bodily injury, property damage, third-party claims, cleanup cost caps, business interruption, and retrospective vs. prospective coverage

- Price. Ask for a range of premiums for different coverage limits and deductibles to get what's best for the insured.
- The policy term and renewal options.
- Assignability.
- Typical exclusions, including those for known conditions; asbestos, lead and mold; radioactive matter; naturally occurring conditions such as radon and arsenic; and storage tanks.

A policy can also include endorsements that add to or take away from the standard coverage in order to tailor it to a particular site or situation. It is here that a skilled broker, with the help of counsel, can make a big difference in terms of getting the needed coverage.

For example, endorsements can more precisely define the pollution conditions, the remediation area or plan, and the cleanup cost. They can include risks that are excluded by the standard policy. They can cover material changes in use, and they can protect one insured in the event of inadequate disclosures by a co-insured.

After the policy is issued

Once the policy is bound, many insureds make the (costly) mistake of forgetting about the policy and their obligations under it.

For example, some policies require written status reports until regulatory closure is achieved. Failure to timely submit such reports could compromise coverage.

Another example is the "Known Contaminant Exclusion" endorsement that provides for removing the exclusion after the filing of a contaminant closure report with regulatory authorities. To remove the exclusion and obtain coverage, the report typically needs to be approved by the carrier. If an insured delays the approval process, it may find itself embroiled in a costly audit or enforcement action by the government (over the adequacy and completeness of the report) without coverage.

the standard exclusion for certain types of mechanic's liens in the 1992 policy, although such coverage will be subject to a Schedule B exception tailored to the applicable state law.

Simplified Claims Procedures

The procedures for submitting a claim have been simplified. Yes, we do pay claims! The 1992 policy obligates the insured to submit the policy as a condition to receiving payment of a loss. In addition, the insured is required to submit a "sworn" proof of loss within 90 days of determining the facts giving rise to a loss. Although the insured is still required to fully cooperate in the claims process, the 2006 policy gives the insurer the option to require a proof of loss and eliminates the requirement that the insured submit the policy for endorsement when a claim is settled.

In addition, a new condition was added to respond to concerns from lenders and others regarding delays in the payment of a claim in situations where the title insurer unsuccessfully pursues an action to eliminate a defect insured against by the policy. In this circumstance, the 2006 policy automatically increases the amount of insurance payable by 10% and gives the insured the option to value the loss either at the time the claim was made or at the date the loss is paid. In addition, several provisions in the 1992 policy that some lenders interpreted as potentially reducing the amount of coverage were eliminated from the 2006 policy.

More Arbitration Options

In response to lender concerns about the arbitration provision, where the amount of insurance exceeds $2 million both the title insurer and the insured must agree to arbitration. In addition, arbitrations under the new policy will be subject to the ALTA arbitration rules since the American Arbitration Association dropped its title insurance rules.

New Short Form Residential Loan Policy

Another revised policy of interest to lenders is the 2006 ALTA Short Form Residential Loan Policy. As the name implies, this is a "short form" version of the standard policy intended for the residential origination market. It provides the same coverages as the "long form" in a format that many lenders find to be more convenient since it incorporates by reference the basic policy and most of the more commonly issued residential endorsements, and also provides a "check the box" format for others.

These are only a few of the numerous changes that have been made to the title insurance policy forms. This is part of an ongoing effort by the title insurance industry to respond to the needs of lenders and other customer groups. Each title insurance underwriter is in the process of submitting the new forms to the various state insurance departments for approval, making it likely that they will be available for use early next year.

New formatting rules for deeds take effect Jan. 1

lost when the document is scanned. The three-inch top margin gives us a standard location where we can safely and efficiently add recording information to each document.

Although these standards were promulgated more than a year ago with the announced effective date of January 1, 2007, my cursory review of documents recorded in this registry over the past two days showed that only a handful of them comply with the standards. If we strictly enforce these standards come January 1, 2007, the vast majority of documents presented for recording will be rejected. While I certainly want to avoid that type of disaster, we cannot continue to ignore this issue. Leaving it to our customers to police themselves will only perpetuate problems with document images for future registry users.

I believe that the proper course is to allow the formatting standards to take effect on schedule, but at least for the balance of 2007, we should consider these rules as establishing a standard of recordability and not a standard of rejection. In other words, if your document complies with the formatting standards, then it will be recorded, but if your document does not comply with the standards, the registry staff will exercise the discretion granted by chapter 36, section 12A and accept or reject documents accordingly. In the meantime, the Registers Association, REBA and other interested entities should make a greater effort to find the correct balance between the realities of modern conveyancing practice and the responsibility of each register to create and preserve a permanent record of land ownership.

sensus of opinion in order to offer specific findings and recommendations on the practice of law in New Hampshire."

Jurisdictions outside New England have also recently considered the respective roles of the lawyer and non-lawyer. For instance, the Delaware Supreme Court ruled in 2000 that conducting real estate closings constitutes the practice of law.

The North Carolina State Bar (the state agency responsible for regulating the practice of law in that state) decided that an attorney need not be physically present at residential real estate closings and that a non-attorney, if adequately supervised by the attorney, may oversee the execution of closing documents and the disbursement of proceeds. In a related move, the North Carolina State Bar approved an Advisory Opinion that certain functions relative to a residential real estate closing constitute the practice of law and may be performed only by a licensed attorney. These functions include the rendering of an opinion on title, the provision of a legal opinion or advice, or the drafting of a legal document.

In 2003, the Georgia Supreme Court stated in Greca, Inc. v. Omni Title Services, Inc. that it has "the inherent and exclusive authority to govern the practice of law in Georgia." The Court then immediately and unanimously approved "Unauthorized Practice of Law (UPL) Advisory Opinion 2003-2," which states that "only a licensed Georgia attorney may prepare or facilitate the execution of a deed of conveyance." These actions firmly establish Georgia as one of the states that require an attorney to preside over real estate closings.

The following web page is a useful resource on unauthorized practice of law decisions around the country: www.abanet.org/rppt/section_info/upl/home.html

As a Bar-Related® title insurance underwriter, CATIC firmly believes that the attorney is instrumental in providing the home-buying public with quality advice and protection in a real estate transaction. The public interest demands that the evaluation of legal rights and obligations in real estate transactions be performed by attorneys trained to provide such services. CATIC will continue to monitor developments in this area and to lend its support to the preservation of the attorney's role in the real estate closing.

gage credit and do not have other mitigating factors.”

In response, Massachusetts Banking Commissioner Steven Antonakes launched a coordinated enforcement program aimed at rooting out this fraud and ensuring that the Massachusetts mortgage market is safe and sound for all Massachusetts residents. This effort involves enforcement actions, regulation and licensing changes in Massachusetts and across the country, and community outreach.

Most directly, the Division ordered 11 mortgage companies to immediately stop soliciting or accepting, either directly or indirectly, any residential mortgage loan applications from consumers for residential property located in Massachusetts. These companies, with offices in Worcester, Lawrence, Lynn, Natick and Woburn, as well as in Houston and New York, were ordered to stop conducting any activities as a licensed broker or lender in Massachusetts and place all pending residential mortgage loan applications with a qualified broker or lender at no loss to the applicants. A list of the companies and the specific actions taken by the Division may be found at www.mass.gov/dob.

New emergency regulations

Employing rarely used legal authority, Commissioner Antonakes also made immediate changes to the regulatory structure governing Massachusetts-licensed mortgage lenders and brokers. Using emergency amendments to its regulations, the Division codified a significantly expanded number of prohibited acts and practices that will constitute immediate grounds for the issuance of cease and desist orders and license suspension or revocation. These acts include:

- Signing mortgage loan applications or documents on behalf of consumers;
- Falsifying income or asset data on such documents;
- Fraudulently inducing or coercing consumers to sign these documents through misrepresentation or omission of crucial information about terms;
- Engaging in a pattern or practice of failing to make disclosures as required by law, regulation or directive;

- Requiring consumers to use the real estate services of a particular entity, agent or broker; and
- Discouraging consumers from seeking or obtaining independent legal counsel or advice.

The full scope of these amendments is still developing but, at this stage, it is noteworthy that state regulators are cognizant of the need for appropriate legal counsel in the field. These amendments to 209 CMR 42.00 et seq. may be grounds for the immediate revocation or suspension of a Massachusetts mortgage lender or broker license. While they are already in force, the Division will need to hold a public hearing and take testimony on these regulations sometime in the coming month.

National database on the way

Two other developments are being touted by state regulators despite the fact that they require future action. Across the U.S., banking officials are highlighting an emerging national database that will allow examiners to review important market information. The Conference of State Bank Supervisors (including the Massachusetts Division of Banks) and the American Association of Residential Mortgage Regulators are implementing a national licensing system with uniform applications for residential mortgage lenders and brokers, as well as a central data warehouse with licensing information and publicly adjudicated enforcement actions. The National Association of Securities Dealers is designing and implementing the Internet-based system. However, the system will not be operational until 2008 at the earliest.

Much closer in time, the Massachusetts Division of Banks and the state's Office of Consumer Affairs and Business Regulation will convene a Fall Mortgage Summit in October 2006. The Summit will provide government, industry, and nonprofit organizations an opportunity to examine the increasing number of mortgage foreclosures across Massachusetts and create a statewide prevention strategy. It is the regulators' hope that a consensus will be reached on meaningful reform for Massachusetts consumers faced with the loss of their homes, and ways to prevent such problems in the future. REBA will be an active participant in the Summit.

The Division of Banks also launched two new mechanisms for complaints of mortgage lending violations. There is an online complaint form available at www.mass.gov/dob, and a Mortgage Fraud Hotline at 800-495-2265, extension 1501.

Action will continue on these fronts throughout the fall and winter. REBA will be active to protect its members' interests and will provide continuing updates as events develop.

- Special permits for research and development and related manufacturing uses can now be allowed by majority local vote (other than in residential, agricultural or open space districts). A similar local vote can allow an expedited review process for development projects of 50,000 square feet of floor area, requiring local permitting to be finished within 180 days of a completed application.
- The Highway Department must promulgate regulations for state highway curb-cut/access permits.
- Attorneys' fees and costs can be awarded to municipalities and non-profits that successfully enforce affordable housing, conservation, agricultural and historic preservation restrictions.
- A new Massachusetts Permit Regulatory Office, headed by a new State Ombudsman, will advise new and expanding businesses on permitting matters.
- A new Interagency Permitting Board will recommend changes to permitting procedures to improve efficiency, communicate with municipal officials regarding permitting issues, and monitor the permitting and development of priority sites.

New Land Court Permit Session

The new Permit Session of the Land Court holds great promise for expediting review of appeals. The session will have original jurisdiction, concurrent with the Superior Court, over most disputes regarding projects with 25 or more dwelling units or construction or alteration of more than 25,000 square feet of gross floor area.

The session's jurisdiction includes:

- Appeals of permit approvals or denials including under Chapters 30A, 40A, 40B, 40C, 40R, 41, 43D, 91, 131, and 131A.
- Appeals seeking equitable or declaratory relief in order to obtain a permit.
- Appeals challenging interpretation or application of laws or rules arising out of a permit or approval.
- Claims for attorneys' fees under Chapter 231, Section 6F, for malicious prosecution, abuse of process, or interference with advantageous relations or contractual relations, provided the claims arise out of a permit appeal.

Cases in the new session will be assigned to a single judge for the life of the case and will be assigned one of three tracks with deadlines for getting to trial and receiving a decision or summary judgment. "Average" cases will get to trial in 12 months and a decision will be rendered in four months; "Fast" cases will get to trial in nine months and a decision will be rendered in three months; and "Track X" cases will get to trial in six months and a decision will be rendered in two months.

To help achieve these timetables, a seventh justice will be added to the Land Court. If the court still can't meet these timetables, the Chief Justice of the Land Court may request additional judges from the Chief Justice for Administration and Management, who may select judges from the Superior Court with land use expertise.

In a departure, the Permit Session will be held in numerous counties, including Suffolk, Middlesex, Essex, Norfolk, Plymouth, Worcester, and Hampden. Cases meeting the jurisdictional requirements filed in other sessions can be transferred to the Permit Session on motion to the Chief Justice for Administration and Management.

Cases in the session may be assigned to mediation before mediators with experience in permitting disputes.

Reform will be ongoing

Beyond the particulars, a theme of the new law is that permitting and appeals reform will be an ongoing project. The Act calls for numerous reports with hard, quantifiable data and annual recommendations for further reform and efficiency measures.

The new law – Chapter 205 of the Acts of 2006 – is the result of an unprecedented degree of cooperation among the largest business associations in the Commonwealth, and the palpable concern of the General Court that a cumbersome permitting process is causing Massachusetts to lose its competitiveness. The background of the law is Massachusetts' back-to-back annual population losses, the high cost of housing (and persistent underproduction of housing), and the new and serious competition for high-tech and biotech businesses and jobs from states in the South, West and Midwest.

The new law is the beginning, not the end, of the effort to regain economic competitiveness and growth for Massachusetts, an effort that will require the cooperation of all branches and levels of government as well as the private sector.
